For print, her debut middle grade graphic novel, The Riceball Fairy, is set for publication in fall 2026. Parts of her young adult memoir, That Year in China, were adapted into a limited TV series nominated for a Golden Eagle Award. Her article was published by Babble.com, a Disney-owned online magazine and blog for young urban parents. She has also written for various popular youth periodicals in China such as The English Salon and Beijing Youth Daily.

For film and television, she has worked with leading studios in Asia: Warner Brothers China, Perfect World Entertainment, Wanda Entertainment, CJ Entertainment, and more. Her notable projects are Sophie's Revenge, What Women Want, and Guns and Roses. Some of her collaborators are internationally renowned talents such as actors Zhang Ziyi, Gong Li, Andy Lau, and directors Eva Jing and Ning Hao.

For radio, she co-founded an award-winning English educational radio program that taught conversational English and introduced American culture to over one million

Chinese listeners. The program won Beijing Educational Radio's Newcomer Program Award and was broadcast by regional radio stations and China National Radio.

Michelle is bilingual (English and Mandarin) and bicultural. She was born in New York City and moved to Taipei, Taiwan, for eleven years before returning to the United States. She has mainly lived in New Jersey and California, in both the northern and southern parts of these two states but never in the middle.

When Michelle is not at her desk writing, she is busy taking long walks, cooking up more stories and thinking about eating baked goods.
